According to the annual circular of the Mercantile Agency, just published, there were in the United States during the last year two thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine failures in business, involving liabilities to the amount of seventyfive millions and fifty-four thousand dollars. For the year 1868 there were two thousand six hundred and eight failures, involving sixty-three millions seven hundred and seventy-four thousand dollars of liabilities. The amount of failures the last year was more than eleven millions Amover that of the year before. Taking New England, Pennsylvania, the State of New York and the city of New York, we find the amount for the two years stood as follows;
